U.S. Warnings To Nicaragua Based on Boxes

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration's concern over the arrival of a Soviet vessel at a Nicaraguan port is based on intelligence information indicating that its car-go included boxes specifically de-signed for carrying MiO jets, U.S. officials say.

The appearance of the vessel in Nicaraguan waters resulted in a public statement of "numost concern" by the State Department on Wednesday and private warnings in Moscow about the gravity with which Washington would view the introduction of advanced Soviet combat aircraft into Nicaragua.

Nicaragua's foreign minister, the Reverend Miguel d'Escoto Brockman, said shortly after the vessel docked that the cargo did not include MiGs. But a U.S. official said: "Nobody's dead sure. It could be toys for tots." He added that there was no doubt the cargo was contained in "MiG boxes."

On Wednesday, President Ronald Reagan said he would regard the delivery of MiGs to Nicaragua as a threat in Central America. Other officials said the United States was considering air strikes to destroy any such planes. |Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, was asked in a television interview Thursday if the United States Security was extremely tight. The research team reported that one recipient, a female, was still alive two years later and had given birth to a healthy kid of her own. The experiment, Dr. Bailey con-cluded, "supports the concept that host maturation following cardiac transplantation during the newborn period is feasible. Dr. Badey's work surfaced again

But Dr. Bailey also has defenders. Difficulties in obtaining homan donors, they said, demand that man begin to re-examine ani-mals as a potential source of life-saving organs. Dr. DeVries said the operation would begin at Humana Hospital Audubon in Louisville "a few days" after a patient was chosen. Dr. DeVries performed the first operation in March 1983.

Fae was born at Barstow, California, 100 miles (160 kilometers) east of Los Angeles, in mid-October with hypoplastic left heart syndrome, a disease that occurs only in infants. The main pumping chamber on the left side of the heart, or left ventricle, fails to develop nor-mally in the fetus. In the United States, the disease, almost always fatal, occurs in one in 12,000 births. Until about four years ago, doctors allowed babies with hypoplas-

In 1974, while at Loma Linda, Dr. Bailey accepted a yearlong ap-pointment at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto. On Wednesday, the government, operating under a state of siege declared by General Pinochet the day before, raided the headquarters of the Socialist Bloc and the Democratic Popular Movement, arresting 22 people, according to Chile's Human Rights Commission. Leaders of the group went into hiding.

Another 214 people were arrested in Santiago and in Valparaiso, newspapers reported.

The state of siege, ramposed Tuesday night after a six-year break, frees the regime from judicial restraints to deal with what

The siege declaration lets the government legally wiretap tele-phones, open mail and hold prison-ers in secret locations indefinitely, while eliminating judicial review of its power to banish dissidents, prohibit meetings and censor the press.

Bell Resigning Education Post In U.S. Cabinet

WASHINGTON — Educa-tion Secretary Terrel H. Bell, who helped lead the nationwide drive to raise school standards and make the education issue an asset for President Ronald Reagan, announced his resignation Thursday. "We're involved in a real renaissance of American educa-tion," Mr. Bell said at a news conference. "It's been a joy to be a part of that." But he said "a. four-year hitch" was long enough and that he would return to the University of Utah as a college professor.

Representative Jack F. Kemp of New York, a proponent of the Republican version of that measure, said he already had been in touch with Representative Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri, the principal House Democratic sponsor of asimilar plan, and was hopeful of "working out a compromise the White House could approve."

Mr. Kemp and his fellow conservative, Representative Newt Gingrich, Republican of Georgia, blamed what they called the "disappointing" House gains not on any lack of effort by Mr. Reagan but on the persisting weakness of the grass-roots Republican Party. But other Republican officials predicted that the party would gain this support in years to come. Mr. Reagan's campaign director, Edward J. Rollins, said, "The real message that's out there is the oldstyle liberalism of the Humphrey-Moodale-Johnson cra has sort of been repudiated by the American people for a second time." Republicans did not assert that this automatically would make them the majority party, but said that Mr. Reagan's big margins among young voters gives the party its best opportunity in recent history to expand its base.

Acknowledging the Republicans' appeal, William Winter, a former governor of Mississippi who was buried in his bid to unseat Senator Thad Cochran, Republican of Mississippi, said: The Democratic Parry does have to take a long look at itself and build along the lines that will attract more of the younger voters of this country. This is where I see the Republican Party as having made serious inroads, in attracting people under 30, people entering business and 30, people entering the professions."

Pravda Says U.S. Result Does Not Mean Reagan Has Popular Support

MOSCOW - Pravda said Thursday that President Ronald Reagan's re-election victory did not mean he had mass support amone Americans.

In an analysis of Mr. Reagan's in an analysis in an roagast sweeping triumph, the Community Party newspaper said his chief advantages had been a "united and monohithic" Republican Party behind him and his skill in appealing to "middle Americans."

In contrast, Pravda said, the Democrats appeared divided following a bitter contest over who should lead the party to the polls and had failed to exploit major issues such as the threat of nuclear war in their campaign.

There is no doubt that Reagan, who 'looked good' on the television screen, was helped by the fact that he based his campaign on a wave of 'hurrah-patriotism' and on speculation about an economic recovery," Pravda said.

Republican leaders, the newspaper said, were wrong to say that Mr. Reagan's victory meant he had a "national mandate" of mass support from the American people.

"He quite clearly did not get na-tional support or a national man-on Mr. Reagan in the Soviet media, many Russians appeared to be convinced that he was universally unpopular and could only lose the election.

UN Namibia Unit Assails South Africa

UNITED NATIONS, New York (UPI) — The UN Council for Namibia strongly condemned on Thursday a South African decision to draft Namibians to serve in the "colonial army" occupying the disputed territory of South-West Africa.

According to the council's statement: "The UN Council for Namibia urges the General Assembly and the Security Council to urgently consider the implications of South Africa's attempts to impose military conscription in Namibia and to adopt effective measures to protect the Namibian people from this additional maneuver by South Africa aimed at further delaying the independence of Namibia."

The UN has recognized the South-West Africa People's Organization as the sole representative of the Namihian people. SWAPO guernillas have waged a war against South African forces for the past 18 years.

Japan Keeps Military Spending Limit TOKYO (AP) - Japan will continue to limit its military spending in the next fiscal year to I percent of the gross national product, an official said Thursday. The director of the Defense Agency, Koichi Kato, commented on the ceiling at a Diet committee when he replied to questions from opposition members. Portions of the meeting were televised.

Mr. Kato said the ceiling, in effect since 1976, would be maintained despite a wage increase granted to members of Japan's military, called the Self-Defense Forces. The current military budget, in effect through March, is 2.9 trillion yen ($11.8 billion), about I percent of the value of the nation's goods and services.

Vienna Upbraids Prague on Shooting

VIENNA (Reuters) — Foreign Minister Leopold Gratz of Austria said Thursday that Austria had protested to Czechoslovakia over the shooting of a Czechoslovak refugee near the frontier with Czechoslovakia. Mr. Gratz said to a radio interview that he had summoned Prague's ambassador to protest about the incident. He said he expected Czechoslovakin to bring to justice those responsible for the shooting, which he described as a violation of basic humanitarian principles. Mr. Gratz said Austria had evidence that Czechoslovak bottler guards had followed the refugee, a railroad worker, Frantisek Faktor, 33, from the southern town of Budejovice into Austrian territory. Mr. Faktor's body was found on Monday 500 yards (450 meters) from the border in a forest near Gmund in northwest Austria.

The police protecting the rebel miners arrested 25 strikers in picket-line clashes as 233 more miners defied the leadership of the National Union of Minewokers to run the gauntlet of angry pickets at a half-dozen mines in Yorkshire, Derbyshire and Northumberland.

The National Coal Board said that 1,960 miners have returned to work since Monday, including 251 in the Yorkshire coalfield that is a militant stronghold. A spokesman for the board said about 53,000 of the union's 183,000 members were at work Thursday. The strike was launched March 12 to protest the coal board's plan to close 20 unprofitable mines and climinate 20,000 jobs.

ISTANBUL (AP) — A court sentenced 10 leftist militants to death Thursday for attempting to bring about a Communist dictatorship in Turkey and murdering three people to serve their purposes, Turkish news

Twenty-live other defendants drew life sentences and 71 others received prison terms ranging from three months to 22 years, the agencies said. Sixty-four defendants were acquitted.

The agencies said the convicted militants were all members of the Action Union, an offshoot of the Turkish People's Liberation Party, a Marxist organization. They were convicted by an Istanbul martial-law tribunal for murdering two policemen and a soldier, attempting to murder several others and opening fire against police stations and buildings of far-right organizations prior to the military takeover four Turkey returned to civilian rule last year, but martial law remains in force in 41 of 67 provinces.

ELECTION BRIEFS

In the End, Polls Got It About Right

WASHINGTON (WP) - In the end, most polls were right about

President Ronald Reagan's landslide re-election victory on Tuesday.

The final survey Friday and Saturday by the Gallup Organization was identical to the actual returns, showing Mr. Reagan leading Walter F. Mondale 59 percent to 41 percent. The last NBC poll showed Mr. Reagan with 58 percent of the vote, while the last New York Times-CBS News poll showed a 58-to-37-percent margin for Mr. Reagan.

From Oct. 26 to Tuesday, the Louis Harris Organization saw evidence of a substantial surge toward Mr. Mondale and a 12, point gap, 56 to 44

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia -The United Nations secretary-general, Javier Pérez de Cuellar, arrived here Thursday and said that: he hoped the "gemine concern" of the world community for Ethiopi-an famine victims would quickly be manifested by more aid.

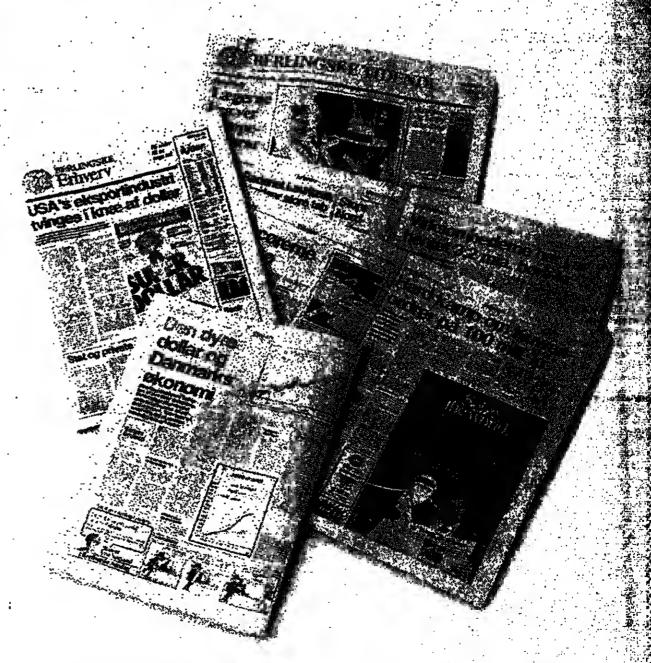

Mr. Perez de Cuellar said at an airport news conference that he met representatives of many donot countries and relief agencies when he was in New Delhi last week for the funeral of Indira Gandhi and had "found a real, genuine concern for the people in this country."

I hope very much that this con-cern will quickly become real, substantive assistance to the people of Ethiopia," he said.

· East German sources said four cargo planes would be flying food . and supplies to Assab, where for-eign aid has piled up, and to the towns of Makelle and Axum in Tigre province in the north. The East Germans have pledged 3,000 tons of foodstuffs.

Soviet cargo aircraft continued to arrive in Addis Ababa carrying helicopters and trucks to be used for food distribution. The Russians have promised 300 vehicles, 24 helicopters and 12 cargo planes to help shuttle food. East Germany and orisoners being killed in custody, the Soviet Union have close politifarmers being gunned down in the cal and military ties with Ethiopia.

Envoys See Soviet Attempt to Block U.S.-India Ties

Washington Past Service
NEW DELHI — Western diplomatic sources here say they expect Moscow will continue trying to provoke anti-American sentiment in India to keep the nation's new leader, Rajiv Gandhi, from moving toward friendlier relations with Washington.

They say they expect the Soviet Union to continue to insinuate that the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency had a role in the assassi-nation of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi on

The sources said this effort is resented by the Reagan administration. The Russians risk "damaging very severely any hope of improv-ing U.S.-Soviet relations" if they continue such a campaign in India, a diplomatic source India's 16 million Sikhs, meanwhile, held Moscow radio first sought to link the Central Intelligence Agency to the Sikhs who killed Mrs. Gandhi the day after she was shot. Since then, the Soviet news agency Tass and the Communist Party newspaper Pravda have continued to publish suggestions that "external forces," implying the United States, were behind a conspiracy.

President Ronald Reagan called the Soviet reports the "world's biggest cheap shot." Secretary of State George P. Shultz said he "forcefully" complained to the Soviet prime minister, Nikolai A. Tikhonov, when they met in New Delhii on Nov. 3 after Mrs.

Gandhi's funeral. Mr. Shultz said afterward that Mr. Tikhonov had told him, "he had looked into it and the Soviet Union had no such view." The reports, however, have continued, appearing in Tass on Nov. 4 and Pravda on Nov. 5, and they have been passed along from Moscow by The Press Trust of India news service. Sources said this suggests that either Mr. Tikhonov was wrong, or was not speak-ing authoritatively, or that Mr. Shultz had misunderstood what Mr. Tikhonov was saying in the private meeting.

A diplomat said he did not expect the

The Soviet charges do not appear to have had much impact here, and they have been condemned by a number of newspapers. The sources said they believed, however, that the Russians could continue such a campaign as long as the Indian government in-quiry into the assassination is underway, Characterizing Mr. Gandhi as more West-ern-oriented than his mother, a Western diplomat said he expected the prime minister to "bring around a re-thinking of relations with the United States."

However, others believe that Mr. Gandhi will not modify Indian policies that have been influenced by the country's role in the nonaligned movement and its enduring eco-nomic and military ties to the Soviet Union.

Some South Asian diplomats believe Mr. Gandhi may prove more open to Soviet influence out of gratitude for Moscow's unwavering economic and military support over the years during which his mother led India. Complicating the equation is the influence of those policy-makers in Washington who favor increasing military aid to Pakistan, even if it undermines the improved relations between the United States and India. Some Indian foreign policy advisors have resisted closer ties to the United States until it scales down its military commitment to Pakistan, diplomatic observers said. The Reagan administration will also have to consider the effects of other irritants to its relations with New Delhi, such as U.S. opposition to Asian Development Bank Loans to India and U.S. willingness to cut back on International Development Agency assis-

Afghan Rebels Cope With Arduous Supply Line

By Anthony Davis

PANJSHIR VALLEY, Afghanistan — The Antonov spotters begin a lazy circling of the snow-capped upper reaches of the Panishir Val-ley shortly after dawn. Amid the tangle of jagged peaks, the drone of the twin-engined reconnaissance aircraft signals the beginning of an-other day's lethal hide-and-seek game between Soviet aviation and caravans of horses, mules and men bringing munitions to this embat-ded valley.

Of special interest to the Antonovs and the Su-25 ground-attack jets that often follow them is the Chamar Pass. The 16,000-foot-high (4,850-meter-high) pass, wedged between some of the highest peaks of the Hindu Kush, forms the northern gateway to the Panjshir from the Nuristan region of eastern

Although the rebels say most of their weapons the captured from Soviet or Afghan forces, they are known to receive assistance from several countries and much of that is thought to he indirectly financed by the United States.

For the Moslem resistance of the Panjshir, probably the best-orga-nized and hardest-hitting center of anti-Soviet resistance in Afghanistan, that lifeline is assuming a growing importance.

Buy an industry-standard personal computer from a world leader in communications, and you get something extra – the ITT XTRA.

A professional communicator specifically designed to grow with your every computing and communications requirement.

ALL THE WORLD'S SOFTWARE

It runs the world's best-selling software, and in local language versions, so you'll always have the programs you need.

Database, spreadsheets, graphics, word processing – you name it, the ITT XTRA takes it all in its stride.

And each of the four models in the range communicates in your language across the entire spectrum of business applications.

THE INS AND OUTS OF GOOD DESIGN

The ITT XTRA is a professional personal computer Since its made by ITT, that's no surprise.

The tilting, swivelling monitor can be adjusted to suit your working position exactly. It takes up the minimum of desk space – you don't have to sit it on a bulky box of electronics.

And there's a choice of monitors – green, amber or colour – all with high-resolution, glare and smudge-resistant screens. While the compact, ergonomically designed keyboard, with sculptured keys and home row indicators, is a pleasure to use.

THE WORLD AT YOUR KEYBOARD

You become more productive, quicker, with the ITT XTRA.

And because it's a professional communicator rather than just another personal computer, you'll never have to keep that extra output to yourself.

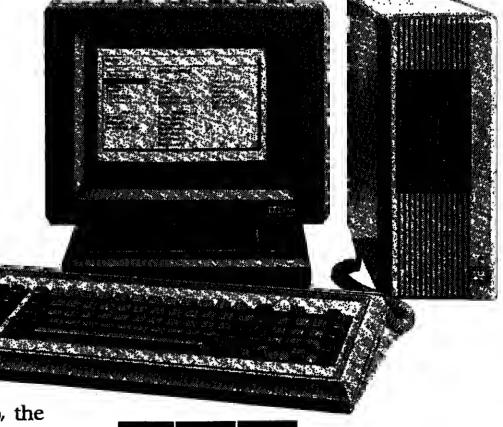

The built-in communications and five expansion slots mean direct access to other micros, mainframes and networks; plus worldwide electronic mail, access to Videotex systems, such as Prestel, and, in the near future, simultaneous voice and data transmissions.

So while conventional personal computers come and go, the ITT XTRA, a professional communicator, is here to stay. Which would you rather have – a conventional personal computer, or a system that offers something extra?

With the way business communications are developing, it pays to go for the extra.

ITT XTRA, the professional communicator.

THINK COMMUNICATIONS, THINK ITT XTRA.

The Challenge Ahead

It was assuredly a splendid victory. Ronald Reagan's conquest of Walter Mondale was the result of the economic well-being, sense of security, and restored national confidence that Mr. Reagan, and general circumstance, have provided Americans during the past four

Tuesday's victory was, however, primarily a personal triumph. There was no equivalent success for the Republicans in the Senate and House races. Its sources were more conventional than many of Mr. Reagan's more conservative supporters would have liked. It was the success of Mr. Reagan's economic policy that most pleased voters, according to what they have told pollsters about their motives for voting as they did. Mr. Mondale's promise to raise taxes to meet the unprecedented federal deficit thus proved a grave political error, however brave and honest it may have been as a policy commitment. An old fashioned politics of economie interest thus still works. On the other hand, polls indicate that the public's conversion to Mr. Reagan's positions on social issues and his foreign policy remains a qualified one. If Mr. Reagan fails to reduce tensions with the Soviet Union in the months to come, and no constructive dialogue is developed on arms control, public uneasiness is bound to increase.

While Mr. Reagan wants negotiations with the Soviet Union, it is not apparent that he is prepared to change his position on arms control in any important respect; he continues to look to Moscow for concessions the Soviets have thus far been unwilling to make.

The course ahead thus is impressively diffi-cult fore Mr. Reagan, if he is the fulfill the promises made to those who elected him. If the economic recovery fades, and the federal deficit is not corrected by continued economic expansion, as Mr. Reagan expects, the Republican Party will find itself in difficulties in the congressional elections of 1986 and in the next presidential election.

Outside the United States, President Rea-gan has often seemed a radical figure, repre-sentative of drastic changes in American society and the American approach to the world. What happened in this election does not justiby that interpretation of the Reagan presidency. Within the United States, Mr. Reagan seems the restorer of prosperity and confidence. A figure of reassurance. It is difficult to believe that the American political landscape really will be as much changed after eight years of Mr. Reagan's government as some have predicted and as Mr. Reagan himself wishes. He has won a new mandate, not because of the promises of change he has made but because of the assurance of continuity and stability he provides. But to have done that, in a country which has undergone the traumas the United States has experienced since 1963, is itself a service for which all must be grateful.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

Why did it seem, even to Republicans, so flat? Expectations, for one thing. After all the Democratic primaries and all the ceaseless pulse-taking with polls, this had to he the most analyzed, scrutinized election ever. Ronald Reagan's win had been predicted so precisely for so long that confirmatory reality was al-most anti-climactic. David Brinkley, the com-mentator, reflected the mood with dark wit Tuesday night on television. Commenting on a Senate race, he said, "Oh, we could have projected that three months ago."

There's another reason for the flat feeling: the other results. Nothing much has changed, The voters resoundingly approved the president's performance so far—and then elected a Congress unlikely in let him do much different. He has won exactly what his partisans chanted - Four Mure Years, of the same. With a vengeance, the voters ratified the status

Nn wonder the news is full of politicians

Granting the president and his supporters who claim to have, or have seen that clusive their full measure of honor and joy, there was still something unsatisfying about the election is the size of the victory," says Lyn Nofziger. the president's longtime sidekick. "It's going to have to be a mandate." The president himself says he means to extend the Mandate "into the next decade and the next century."

A Democratic representative, Tony Coelho, meanwhile, recalls how many House seats the Republicans lost in 1982 and says, "They needed 26 to look good and they didn't get it. They don't have a mandate." Indeed, Speaker O'Neill says his side's got it: "The voters sent Democrats to Congress as a mandate... as a safety net for the American public."

This search for Mandate won't end soon. There will be Republicans who claim a 59-to-41 mandate to curtail spending for Medicaid abortions or a 59-to-41 mandate for MX missiles, as though what the voters have just endorsed is a detailed conservative checklist.

But whatever politicians say for public consumption, in their bearts they know what the mandate is, and it's nothing so narrow or detailed. Tuesday's mandate, as in most presidential elections when times are good, is a broad instruction to keep them good. And if times should turn hard at election time, the voters will provide a new mandate soon

—THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion

The Election From Abroad

Mr. Reagan's new willingness to take arms control seriously is very welcome. It is not clear whether he and his advisers sufficiently understand that an arms control agreement may not be available in isolation. If there is linkage in American minds, for example between Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and East-West relations, then there will also be linkage in Soviet minds. The president may have to choose between the serious measures of arms control he now seems to want and the continuance of his build-up of defense expenditure. In particular it would be reassuring if be were to reconsider some of the new strategic weapons programs and especially the so-called Star Wars initiative.

- The Financial Times (London).

The danger facing the president is that the mood of vaulting optimism which he has aroused and exploited could prove fragile. . . . It may well be that, through no fault of his own, Mr. Reagan's new-found interest in arms control produces nathing very tangible. How-ever, once again, hopes will have been exaggeratedly raised nuly to be dashed. Perhaps the president's first princity of his second term should be that of bringing his supporters back down to earth.

- The Daily Telegraph (London). We bope that -now that his last campaign is fought -he may, like presidents before him, come to worry about the verdict of history and the avoidance of Armageddon. Mr. Rengan has not brought the stability of peace in his first term. He has rearmed profligately, negoti-ated with manifest insincerity and argued that naly fear and economic necessity will eventually bring the Russians to the negotiating table. A Soviet Union that has already waited for four years may yet decide to wait another four. Mr. Reagan does not have that luxury. . . . The question for the second Mr. Reagan is the question the first Mr. Reagan never answered. Does be really want in re-establish a relationship and the beginnings of a new detente? - The Guardian (London).

Mr. Reagan will have to realign himself internationally. On the most important question, arms control, he deems his country now strong enough to open and reopen a dialogue with the other superpower. But on the one band it is difficult to see the Soviet Union rush in in applaud the victor.

- Le Soir (Brussels).

In the next four years, the dangerous drive toward American military superiority over the Soviet Union may well take the world to the brink of a holocaust.... For the nonaligned nations the prospect is bad weather.

- The Hindustan Times (New Delhi).

The important point about President Rea-gan's victory is that be will now operate for some time with the massive authority of such a successful election behind him. That will reinfarce his position when dealing with the other functional elements within the American system. It will revive the spirit of the Alliance with governments of the right in London and Bonn and a robustly committed viewpoint in Paris It will command the respect of adversaries or potential adversaries elsewhere in the world. - The Times (London).

FROM OUR NOV. 9 PAGES 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1909: Taft Advocates Railway Control WASHINGTON - One of the most important bills which President Taft will advocate will undoubtedly be resisted bitterly by the financial element. It is a measure which aims at giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to approve the issue of stock and bonds by railways. Another equally important recommendation will be to prohibit any railway from owning stock in another railway, a practice which has led to many abuses. The President has made it clear that be has no hostility to the corporations and that legitimate enterprise has nothing to fear from him. However, as the corporations are granted certain privileges, he is of the opinion that they must recognize their responsibilities and keep themselves strictly within the law.

A Resounding Lesson for the Democrats

WASHINGTON — In his 1980 concessinn statement, Vice President Walter Mondale said: "The people have peacefully wielded their staggering power." Nn one has been as blasted as Mr. Mondale by that power, Adlai Stevenson lost twice by a cumulative electoral vote total of 899 to 162, In Mr. Mondale's last two times on a national ticket be has lost Often after elections the sluice gates of criticism open as leaders in the losing candidate's party say, with an air of slighted genius, "If only he had listened to me," Not this time.

Mr. Mondale might have made it slightly closer with a more plausible signtly closer with a more plansible (and a Southern) running mate, and a serious idea, such as radical tax simplification. Instead, the campaign that began with the appearance of him being bullied by women's groups ended with him promising to appoint a Hispanic to his Cabinet. Ye gods.

The traditional edifice of Demo-

The traditional edifice of Democratic politics has been razed to the ground, the rubble plowed and salt sown. There should be no nnasense about the 1984 outcome being caused by taetical miscalculatinns. The Democratic Party is a refractory mule, but surely this third landslide in four elections will get its attention. On election eve. Mr. Mondale told a crowd that Republicans never use the word "decent." Democrats would do well to quit using it. Mr. Mondale frequently said, "I would rather lose an election about decency than win one about self-interest." Such rhetoric, implying that Republicans are not just wrong but indecent, is the extreme moralizing of a party out of the habit of thinking and even argu-ing, and in the habit of asserting a moral monopoly.

By George F. Will

The 1982 recession was bad for Democrats because it allowed them to think that they did not need to think - that they could coast, counting on the hammer blows of economic hardship to reassemble the nld co-alition. But by nnw it is bizarre, if common, for otherwise rational people to ask, "Are we on the verge of a realignment in favor of the Republican Party?" Suppose Noah, in the 34th day of the 40 days of rain, had asked his wife, "Do you think we may get some rain?" Ye gods. At the presidential level, realignment is a fact.

Republicans have won four of the last five presidential elections. In the last four they have won 82.4 percent of the electoral votes, approaching Franklin D. Roosevelt's four-election achievement of 88.3 percent. And the Republican run of successes is a fluke

Republicans have done it with three candidates, not just one.

· The nation was moderately conservative when it chose Dwight D. Eisenhower over Mr. Stevenson twice. Next it barely preferred John Kenne-dy, a moderate Democrat, over Richard Nixon. Lyndon Johnson, the only post-Truman president with a Roose-veltian, liberal domestic agenda, was an accident of assassination and the perceived radicalism of his Republican opponent, Barry Goldwater. Two years later Republicans gained 47

House and three Senate seats, In 1968 the combined Nixon and George Wallace vote was 57 percent. In 1972 Mr. Nixon got 61 percent against George McGovern. In 1976 the Democrat perceived as the most conservative in the nomination contest, Jimmy Carter, was nominated and narrowly defeated a conservative Republican, Gerald Ford, Then came two conservative landslides.

Tuesday's election buried the most ideologically uniform and liberal ticket in American history. The ticket was a quixotic offering to an electorate even more conservative than it nominees and the unreasonably charming Reagan personality. But in four elections the Democratic Party has tried to sell the country Mr. Mc-Govern, Mr. Carter twice and Mr. Mondale. Four such "aberrations" consecutively are not aberrations. They constitute a single propensity. It is the Democratic Party's propensity to disregard the public's thoughts—not thoughts about Mr. Reagan's smile, but about the issues. Mr. Reagan has a right to feel he is sitting on a pink cloud over an ocean of joy with a rainbow draped around his shoulders. But Mr. Reagan will rightly insist that Democrats are dehiding themselves when they say this was a rout produced by his smile. In the 19th century, an exasperated (and probably jealous) critic said: "Horatio Alger wrote the same novel 135 times and never lost his audience." In Mr. Reagan's long career he has dem-onstrated that in a democracy, you build an audience by saying a few clear and convincing things 135,000 times. The lesson of Tuesday — a lesson so stark that it may be missed by persons in hot pursuit of subfleties — is that both Mr. Mondale and Mr.

Reagan spoke clearly, but Mr. Rea-

— into a mixed-up frame of mind.

Voters told the exit polisters on Tuesday that they preferred Mr. Reagan for leadership, but favored Mr.
Mondale's chances of keeping the nation out of war.

They voted nationwide for a president who has achieved no arisis control agreements but who pledged that he would make arms control a high priority in his second term. They went wild for a president who spent three years lambasting the Soviets' and the last few months demonstrat ing his intense interest in finally meeting his Soviet counterpart. compounded of weak Democratic on a not-so-secret war against the Nicaraguan Sandinist government.

If the Reagan majority thus gives the impression of being at odds with itself, a recent study conducted by ah organization called the Public Agenda Foundation can explain everything: American public oninion is profoundly at war with itself.

The foundation is a nonpartisan group whose chairman is former Sec-retary of State Cyrus Vance; its president is the respected public-opinion expert and polister, Daniel Yankelo-

In presidential years, the founda-tion prepares briefing books for the candidates. This year's briefing, compiled in collaboration with the Center for Foreign Policy Development at Brown University, concentrated on:

dictions lies a tormenting concern over nuclear war that has increased massively" over the last 20 years, the foundation reports.

Out of this concern has developed a clear consensus: "Upwards of 75 percent of the American people, in every demographic group, now agree that to engage or risk nuclear war-would be to risk nuclear suicide and an overwhelming majority to believe (1) that the Soviets are dangerous adversaries who are "constantly testing us, probing for weakness and quick to take advantage whenever they find any," but (2) that "picking a fight in the nuclear age is too dangerous a policy and it is in our best interest to negotiate, to think of peaceful solutions rather than aggressive ones." Now that is not a precise prescription for managing the U.S. role in the world. But it does remforce the election-night analysis of Henry Kissinger. He isn't sure the Soviet leadership may not be too divided by their "succession crisis" to be able to negouate - even if they decided to do so.

If that's so, the Public Agenda Foundation's findings support Mr.
Kissinger's conclusion that "with this overwhelming mandate, (the president) is in a very good position." That may be the main message, how-ever mufiled, on foreign policy in-Ronald Reagan's towering victory.

What the Republicans Still Have Not Won

WASHINGTON — If all politics really were local, as the saying goes, we would be congranulating the Democrats. They came out of the 1984 election securely in control of most city and county governments, state legislatures, two-thirds of the governorships, the national House of Representatives (for the 33d and 34th consecutive years), and even managed to increase their strength in the Senate in the face of President Reagan's landslide.

But ignoring the presidency in an essay on politics is rather like ignoring Da Vinci in an art-history course.
While there is much to be said about the challenge facing the Democrats, let us focus for this moment on the Republican Party, which has estab-lished a preemptive claim now to being the party of presidential govern-ment in the United States.

There is a mystery to be unraveled here and a point to be made about its future prospects. There is no precedent in American history for a party so skimpy in its grass-roots strength exercising so near a monopoly on the highest office in the land as the Republicans have done. It is a recent phenomenon. There have been 10 presidential elec-tions since Franklin D. Roosevelt ended his unique four-term tenure in the White House. In the first five, between 1948 and 1964, the Democrats won three times and, by my calculations, received about 2 million more votes than the Republicans. Of was in 1980 and 1984.

By David S. Broder

the five elections between 1968 and last Tuesday, by contrast, Republicans won four and amassed a cumulative edge of about 44 million votes. They achieved that historic breakthrough even though there have only rarely been times in that 16-year period when as many as one-third of the voters thought of themselves as Republicans - and often much less. How does one explain this turnaround? It is not a classic political realignment, for there is -even after the twn Reagan landslides - very little to suggest and much to refute the notion that millions have accepted his invitation to join him in shifting their identification and voting inclinating from the Demneratie column to the Republican.

The young voters, who gave Mr. Reagan his highest majorities and are the repository of Republican hopes for a future realignment, describe themselves most often as anti-party people, deliberately splitting their tickets in an expression of personal antonomy and a rebuke to organized power brokers. These people could become the basis of conservative po-litical analyst Kevin Phillips' longadvertised "emerging Republican majority," but only if the perfor-mance of the next four years confirms their hopes of economic gain and if blicans nominate a candi-

Until that happens, Republican presidential victories will continue to rest on the ability of particular candidates to capture the support of "weak Democrats," those who retain an in-herited or cultural predisposition to think of themselves as Democrats but who cast it aside for their presidential vote when convenience suits. We know a lot from polling and interviewing about who these folks are. They are middle-class whites, often the middle-age men and women who grew up in blue-collar homes, where the memories of the Depression were fresh. They have worked their way free of the shackles of povcrty and are conservative in that fundamental sense of wanting to preserve — and if possible, expand the gains they have made.

Found most frequently in the inner-ring suburbs of the Northern cities and in the South, they see the Democrats as a party of have-nots. And it is no coincidence that they began to break away — on the presidential line - in 1968.

That was the first election in the modern era when inflation became a major issue. Inflation is a killer issue for those middle-class families, for it threatens their values — a belief in hard work and savings — as much as it erodes the value of their dollars. Since they cannot cope with inflation themselves, they look to the president, the ultimate authority figure in way to solve it. Richard Nixon was re-elected in a landslide in 1972, when there was no sign of a Republican tide, after resorting to the extreme of a wage-price freeze to halt the resurgence of inflation. Jimmy Carter was driven from office in 1980 as much because be failed to deal with inflation as because he failed to free the hostages. Mr. Reagan's victory Tuesday again without much evidence of a fundamental shift in the Republican direction - had to do with the confidence the white middle class gained, not from the conquest of Grenada, surely, but from the seeming victory over inflation. There is a clear implication from all this for the economic-policy de-bate beginning within the Reagan ad-ministration and among congressio-nal Republicans. It is between the supply-side advocates of further tax cuts and full-throttle growth and those who put their priority on cut-ting the deficit by trimming entitlements and defense spending and, if necessary, raising taxes.

If Mr. Reagan wants to leave the next Republican candidate a healthy political legacy, he will choose the course that promises to keep inflation down — and make everything else secondary. If he keeps his eye on that target, he could live to see a Republican realistment -- even if it doesn't

The Ferraro Factor: A Victory Despite the Defeat

BOSTON — It was less than four months since that day in Minnesota when a congresswoman from Queens was introduced. "Thank you, Vice President Mondale," she said, and paused. "Vice President. It has such a nice ring to it."

It was less than 16 weeks since Mr. Mondale injected that lackluster campaign with a booster shot of energy named Geraldine Ferraro. "American history," she said that day, "is about doors being opened."

It was exactly 116 days from that

July 12 high to the election-night low when all the polls came true and Geraldine Ferraro did not become the first woman vice president. From the beginning, Mrs. Ferraro was running two campaigns and she knew that better than anyone. She was running as the Democratic nominee and running as a woman. "I want to come out of this campaign a winner, I want to be Vice President," she said in North Carolina on one of her innumerable campaign stops. And if she didn't get that job? "I want it to be said, 'She was a professional'"

In the next weeks a great deal will be written about the Ferraro factor. Was it a political plus, a minus, a wash? Are women better off than

By Ellen Goodman

For people who judge things by statistics, the results are bound to be and the sexist who came to admire mixed. There was an 8-point gender gap. But women didn't stop the flow of blood ont of the Democratic Party from becoming a geyser. Mrs. Ferra-ro didn't do the impossible: She didn't make Fritz Mondale president.

The analysis is more mixed. Surely, the financial investigations rubbed glitter off this new star. But there were other mistakes. The Mondale camp never played to the women's vote until the very end. The strategy laid out July 4 when women leaders talked to the candidate about the political possibilities of a woman no the ticket was dormant. It was as if the Mondale people expected her to win women's votes on mysticism.

From the beginning the Republicans went after the women's vote with ads and a campaign that stressed economie gains, not equal rights. In contrast, Mrs. Ferraro made her final full-tilt pitch for the women's vote four days before the election. But not all victories come down to numbers. Mrs. Ferraro did win that her. She won it among those who never thought they'd live to see a woman on the ricket.

In many ways this race was a quali-fying test. The first woman, the out-sider, was tested for admission to the highest ranks of the profession. She also was put through tests of nerve, answering questions about family finances, debating toughness and leadership with George Bush. At times, it seemed that there were millions of graders poised, waiting for the first break of emotion — a single tear, flash of anger, "bysteria" — to flunk her. She passed, not just with the 16 percent of voters who said a woman on the ticket was a plus, but with the 55 percent who said sex made no

. I don't know how Mrs. Ferrare will assess these four months in the long morning-after. On election eve she said, "It hasn't always been easy, but it's been worth it for all of us." I hope that's true for her. I am sure it's true for "all of us." Are we better second race — the race for women. off than we were four months ago? She won it among those who rooted Ask the women at the rallies who for her even if they didn't vote for reached out to her. Ask the mothers and fathers who held their daughters up just to see her.

In blistering defeat, this candidate told a room of supporters: "Cam-paigns, even if you lose them do serve a purpose. . . We made a difference." Geraldine Ferraro, first woman, family woman, politician, ran with grit and grace, humor and intelligence. She made history. "Nnt bad," as she would put it, "for a housewife from Queens, buh?" The Washington Post Writers Group.

Dith Pran's Return From the Killing Fields

EW YORK — He's an unlikely hero, as heroes often are. His name is Dith Pran, he was born in 1942, and he lives now in Brooklyn although he comes from Siem Reap, near the Angkor temples in northwest Cambodia.
His story is told in a big film that had a big opening last week in New York, "The Killing Fields."

The title is in part a metaphor for the once lovely land of Cambodia after Pol Pot's New York, "Rouse caired persons at the Pol Pot's Polyte Cambodia after Pol Pot's Polyte Cambodia.

Khmer Rouge seized power on April 17, 1975. It is also the name Cambodians give to the fields in which the Khmer Rouge — who are estimated in four years of terror to have killed at least three million of their fellow citizens out of a population of seven million — buried up to 5,000 bodies at a time. The killing fields were easy to recognize because the grass, enriched by the bodies, was greener than anywhere else and the wells were choked with bones.

That Dith Pran is bere at all, eating tuna salad, drinking Coke and smoking Newports in the cafeteria of The New York Times, where he is now a staff photographer, is thanks to Sydney Schanberg, who covered the war in Cambodia for The Times until he was expelled in 1975. And that Schanberg lived to file his vehement and brilliant dispatches about the fall of Phnom Penh is entirely thanks to Dith Pran.

entirely thanks to Dith Pran.

"We are brothers," Pran says. "When you work together for so long it is like you have the same hlood." He is slight and precise in his button-down shirt, paisley tie and nicely cut tan suit with a double-vented jacket. He carries a plastic attaché case with a New York Jets sticker. The beguiling grin that conceals the cleverness of his gaze must often have helped save his life during his four often have helped save his life during his four years as a prisoner of the Communist Khmer Rouge. He radiates trustworthiness, his speech is unemphatic, his face unmarked.

"With Cambodians the grief leaves the ace quickly, but it goes inside and stays here a long time," Pran once told Schanerg, who quoted the remark in an article for he New York Times Magazine about his tiendship with and his search for Dith Pran, ith whom he had worked since 1972. They ere separated in April 1975, when foreigns were evacuated and Pran was left to face e Khmer Rouge.

Schanberg's article, "The Death and Life if Dith Pran," became the basis of "The killing Fields," which was produced by Da-vid Puttnam of "Chariots of Fire" fame and vigorously directed by Roland Joffe, a new-comer to feature films. Sam Waterston plays Schanberg and a Cambodian doctor, Haing S. Ngor, a Pol Pot prisoner who now lives in California, plays Dith Pran. Thailand stands in for the ruined land of Cambodia. Probably no film has shown in such detail what happens to a civilian population under Evacuation scene in "The Killing Fields."

attacks of unimaginable cruelty; certainly no film has thought to show the pain caused when the three great powers — the United States, China and the Soviet Union — used Cambodia as their pawn. "It's worse than hell, I would say. You can't believe it," Prantana in the transport of the state of the same than the same of the same than the same of the sam says in his unemphatic way.

The film concerns Schanberg's guilt at having left Pran behind and his desperate, and finally successful, search for him. But this, and the vaguely outlined military and political aspects of the story, simply serve as a framework to tell what happened to Cambodians under the Khmer Rouge terror.

At first many people thought that, after the corrupt, U. S.-backed Lon Nol government, the Khmer Rouge might bring peace and reconciliation. Dith Pran says one rea-son he refused to be evacuated with his wife, Ser Moeun, and their four children was that he did not believe the Khmer Rouge would be so terrible. "And second," he adds, "why should I leave, because I am a newsman and there are not enough reporters left. The news will disappear, so I stay so I can tell more of what I see so the world will know."

It was Schanberg, now a Times columnist, who made Dith Pran a newsman. When several journalists be used Pran as a transla-tor and aide. Finding him exceptionally use-ful, Schanberg had The New York Times take Pran on as an official stringer, effective-ly blocking journalists for other publications from using him. Pran considered himself a newsman whose duty was to stay on the job. Instead he fell into the hands of the Khmer Rouge, enduring frightful suffering until Vietnamese attacks threw the Khmer Rouge into disarray and he was able to head for the Thai border in October 1979.

OST members of his family were killed. His father had been a public works official engaged in road building. Fran studied French and ambitiously taught himself English. Had war not come, he thinks he might have been on easy street. "To be middle-class in an underdevel oped country would have been very good," he says. Toward the end of the Sihanouk regime, in the late 1960s, he was a receptionist at a well-known tourist botel. L'Auberge Royale des Temples, right near the Angkor temple complex, and although Cambodia wariness of foreigners. "It is not easy in a country that has no official relationships, you have to be careful.

You know who they are — the CIA agents, the Sihanouk agents. You don't talk. But if you know you're safe, you talk, you pass on what's going on."

No wonder Schanberg found this spirited and astute man invaluable. They worked very closely, Schanberg by his own admission often thoughtless and driven, Pran ever resourceful and tolerant of Schanberg's rages because, he says, he understood the American's passion to tell the truth about his country to a world that considered Cambodia just an unfortunate footnote to Vietnam.

"We reinforce each other's compulsions and desires. He is as obsessed as I am with seeing the story to the end," Schanherg wrote of Pran. When the Khmer Ronge arrived, Schanberg and other foreign journalisls were arrested and faced certain death. Handling the Khmer Rouge with quick courage and cumning, Pran saved their lives. Days later, when the foreigners were evacuated, Pran had to be left behind. Schanberg filed shattering dispatches from Bangkok about the fall of Phnom Penh and returned in America, writing over 500 letters in an attempt to find Pran and accepting his Pulitzer Prize on behalf of Pran and himself. When Pran was finally located. Schanberg flew to fetch him in a refugee camp in Thailand, and within 10 days they were in San Francisco, where Pran's wife and hildren then lived. Pran was very ill, shaking with malaria and malnutrition.

"Sydney massaged me along the way from Bangkok to San Francisco. He gave me pills, he massaged me like 1 was a haby."

While Schanberg was ravaged by guilt in New York, Pran had been working 14 hours a day under his Khmer Rouge captors, subsisting for four years on a few grains of rice and on the dream that one day Schanberg would land in a belicopter and take him away.

"Because 1 know his heart very well, 1 would dream that he is thinking to me and 1 am thinking to him. I know he was going to do something. Sometimes you go out in a field and you don't see any Khmer Rouge and you get a daydream right away, you say this would he a good place to land a helicopter and then I can go out."

But Pran was prudent even in his dreams. "You don't let that kind of dream creep into your head because you will be in trouble."

Pran says that 99 percent of Cambodians believe in ghosts. He no longer does, "When you have walked in the middle of those fields you are no longer scared of ghosts." He has given his four children only the rough outlines of his life as a prisoner. He has three sons aged 20, 15 and 12 and a daughter of 17 and be cannot face telling them the details. He has taken them to see the film and they wept. He weeps, too: at the scene where Schanberg tries to make Pran's wife hope that her husband is still alive, and during the Pulitzer speech when Schanberg says the prize is Pran's as well as his own. He thinks Schanberg was right to leave him behind.

"He is feeling guilty that he cannot take me out, but for me I don't blame him. He's a real nice person, be knows what happened to the Cambodian people. He cares. He wrote a lot to let the world know."

PRAN intends to become a U.S. citizen and has only the faintest hope that his country will ever be free and neutral again. "We were used by the super-powers, they used our land to test their weapons. And we suffered as Cambodian people, turned upside down from deep cultured people to madness."

When he dreams of Cambodia (he cannot bear to call it Kampuchea hecause of the Khmer Rouge associations), be always sees the same thing. Temples, the temples! I touch them a thousand, thousand times. I can touch and feel this is this because I grew up there and I know them all. That's my dream, in my mind, to be a neutral zone so all the world can see the temples belong not to Cambodia but to the whole world."

Thanks to Schanberg, Pran was given training as a photographer and was rightly pleased at having made the front page of The New York Times that day with a picture of Japanese dancers. He lives in a small house in Brook hap because he is afraid of classes. in Brooklyn because he is afraid of skyserap-

"I tell you one thing, I dnn't like to sleep in elevations because I'm afraid of fires. I have four children, what if something happens? When you are alone you just get a rope and get down, but to get four kids down, that's something.

His wife works for a bank. Pran insists on speaking Klimer to his children and dislikes Western food. The children keep saying. "We're in America," but Pran remains a traditionalist and, through experience, a wary man. He bought a car simply to drive his 17-year-old daughter to school. Then be lakes the 45-minute subway ride to work.

He no longer feels troubled by having survived. "I did feel guilty before to be alive but now I feel all right. You know why? I accomplished my desire to tell the world the true story of what happened to my country.

"I am lucky because I have seen every-thing. I'm pleased to have seen it, even the Khmer Rouge, because I'm a journalist, a curious person. I've reached my goal, to know the Western side and the Cambodian side. I think I got what I want.

"For me. I'm all right, I know how to get along. When I came to the Khmer Rouge, I knew how to deal with them. When I came to the free world. I knew how to deal with them. That's how you survive."

He neatly clears his cafeteria tray, checks his watch (it is 4:09 P.M.) and prepares for a screening of "The Killing Fields" for The New York Times' staff that evening. He will stand there to greet his colleagues and will try to wait outside during the screening. That way, no one will see him cry.

What's Wrong, and What's Right, With Mega-Exhibitions

by John Russell

EW YORK - People are really very perverse. There is on Manhattan Island, north of 52d Street Park, as dense and as various a concentration of great art on a permanent basis as can be found anywhere in the world. Inch by inch, and gamut by gamut, there is no capital city of which New Yorkers need be envious. though there are many that they long to visit. And the situation gets better year by year. New buildings go up, new collections come in, individual masterpieces arrive almost by

Yet what do strangers ask when they come in from out of town? And what is it that the professional critic of art most often hears from his neighbor at dinner? "What's the new hlockbuster?" they say, nine times out of ten, and if there doesn't happen to be one, they pull a face.

Everything about that question is exasperating. The very word "blockbuster" should be outlawed. The Random House dictionary defines it as "an aerial bomb containing high explosives and weighing from four to eight tons, used as a large-scale demolition bomb." What kind of metaphor is that for some of the subtlest, most fragile and yet most constructive of burnan enterprises? Nothing can condone the use of that loathsome word, with its implications of brutish and indiscriminate massacre.

This being so, we should applaud the new designation for exhibitions like "The Vati-can Collections," "Manet, 1832-1883" and the current "Van Gogh in Arles" that appears in the annual report of the Metropoli-tan Museum for the year 1983-84. "Megaexhibitions" is the coinage in question, and let us hope that it sticks, because the megaexhibition is not going to go away. Whether or not they always make sense, and no matter how much they interfere with the normal workings of a major museum, they are scheduled to keep coming.

In coming, as will be made clear later, they bring mega-benefits for the museums. Attendance is up, revenue from admissions is up, income from the shops is out of sight. A whole new public hammers on the door, with eves wide open and money to spend. But, as Oscar Wilde said, "Each man kills the thing he loves," and nowhere is that more true than in a museum. It's no fun going to an exhibition when you can't see it. Ever since the Picasso exhibition of 1980 at the Museum of Modern Art, there have been times when visitors who were not seven feet tall would go to a museum and have irouble seeing anything at all. The jostling for position, the noise, the heat, the all-permeating agitation — all are fatal to the experience of art. "At least we were there," we may say when we get home. But in the ways that matter — perceptions confirmed in peace and stillness, memories defined once and for all — we weren't really there. We were numbered, like refugees, and pro-cessed, like cheese, and pushed around as if in a pickpockets' playpen, and that was the

er and head for another part of the museum. Balked of the Picassos in the Modern Museum's "Primitivism" show, we could recoup with his "Sleeping Head" of 1906 in the museum's drawing galleries. Balked of Van Gogh, we could turn to the works of art of quite another kind in which the Met is so rich Bernini's marble "Bacchanal," for one, and the lately lent "Annunciation" by Dier-

ick Bouts for another. But of course we don't want to miss the mega-exhibition allogether, and quite right, too. Mega-exhibitions are not in themselves a discreditable adventure. Like a massive dose of vitamins, they aim to make up for deficiencies in our diet of which we may never have been aware. Their very amplitude makes us take note of them as exceptional events. Sometimes they are intellectual constructs of a high order, as is the case with the current "'Primitivism' and 20th-Century Art" at the Museum of Modern Art and its accompanying catalog. Sometimes, as was the case with this year's "Watteau" at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, which moved on, with some omissions, to Paris, we have an assemblage of great paint-ings and drawings that could not be dreamed of at any other time.

OMETIMES they make no sense whatever in historical terms, like the recent "A Day in the Country," a show of French landscape paintings that was shown at the Los Angeles County Museum and elsewhere. But that show included so many wonderful paintings that it gave unbounded pleasure to an overflowing public. Sometimes they result from high-level governmental negotiation, as will happen with "India!" at the Metropolitan Museum in the summer of 1985. Sometimes, as will be the case when the collection of the princes of Liecbtenstein comes to the Met in the fall of 1985, the U.S. public will glimpse several hundred years' of continuity in collecting that has no parallel in this country. Quite apart from that, and although everyone is supposed to be able to travel nowadays, the mega-exhibition is a way of seeing the world without leaving home, and one for which many visitors are grateful. Thanks to the shows mentioned above, and to "Tutankhamen" and others among their prede-cessors, the stay-at-home New Yorker could see some of the best of Cairo, the best of Dresden, the best of Vatican City and the best of Paris without having to reach for his passport. The Met's forthcoming "Treasury of San Marco" will do the same for Venice and when the apotheosis of the English country house is celebrated in the exhibition that is to fill the whole of the East building of the National Gallery of Art in 1985, we shall have a magic carpet to places that would otherwise involve a month or more on winding English roads. Some of these exhibitions bring instruc-tion on a very high level. Even those who work year-round at the Van Gogh Museum in Amsterdam have gone home with new ideas about Van Gogh after seeing "Van Gogh in Arles." The fact that more than 35,000 copies of the Manet catalog were sold at the Met is an indication that people did unt just come to gape. William Rubin's extensive contributions to the "Primitivism" catalog bring order, fact and sequence into areas of art history that have long been short on all three of them. (The same can be said, by the way, of the catalog of the Douanier Rousseau exhibition now at the Grand Palais in Paris, which arrives at the Museum of Modern Art on Feb. 5, 1985.)

And then there is the fact that, directly or indirectly, very large exhibitions make money. As Philippe de Montebello, director of the Met, makes clear in the annual report, "We have come to recognize, inescapably and regrettably, that mega-exhibitions are the most pronounced and direct road to reducing the deficit." When it comes to scrutinizing a balance sheet, this particular visitor to the Met will never make the board of Lazard Frères, but he did figure out from the report that whereas the museum was $686,557 in the red for 1980, $1,304,629 in the red for 1981 and $2,102,450 in the red for 1982, it was $263,762 in the black for 1983 and $425,175 in the black for 1984.

The reader of the report will also find that income from admissions rose from $2.47 million in 1980 to $6.50 million in 1983 and $5.52 million in 1984. (The figure for 1983 includes more than $2 million in special admissions to the Vatican exhibition.) It is also relevant that income from membership more than doubled during the period 1980-84, and that annual expenditure on special exhibitions rose from $737,805 in 1980 to $2,487,580 in 1983 and $2,322,063 in 1984. The recent surpluses have not been owed entirely to the special exhibitions — many other factors, and many a generous individual contribution, have also to be taken into account - but there is no doubt that the momentum of the mega-exhibition has had a major role to play.

O what's wrong with them? And why does the Met's president, William B. Macomber, join with its director in thinking that they are not altogether a good thing? Here is what he says: "The very success of the professional staff in mounting such popular shows serves to underline the continuing fragility of the museum's financial situation and what all of us agree to be an overdependence on special exhibitions revenues." ("All of us," please note). Opinions thus forcefully put, and apparently echoed with one voice by the professional staff, cannot be disregarded.

There are two main drawbacks to the mega-exhibition, quite apart from the subsidiary one that it may set up a network of nbligations that will take a decade or more to work off. "Neither a borrower nor a lender be" was all very well for Shakespeare's Polomius, hnt a great museum that borrows from annther museum is going to be asked to lend something in return, sooner or later, and a mega-exhibition is likely to rack up a whole slew of pledges that will one day have to be

The prime drawback is that simply by going there in such large numbers and doing so much to help the balance sheet, we make trouble. Simply by breathing we force up the stiled as we may be, there are just too many

The second drawback is that the m exhibition diverts money, time and scholar-ship from the main business of a museum. which is to enlarge and improve its permanent collections, and keep them in optimum condition, show them to their best advantage and tell us more about them than we would ever have found out for ourselves. None of this can be done properly at the Met if the museum is compelled to maintain a virtual hiring freeze, as has been the case for several years now, and if a great deal of curatorial and conservatorial time is spent on temporary exhibitions, no matter how glamorous. Loans have to be begged for, traveled for and bartered for. Simply to check and re-check the physical condition of loans that run into the hundreds takes time away from the museum's permanent concerns. Activities expand, but the number of people who can carry them out does not.

ONE of this may matter much to people who go to the mega-exhibitions in barely manageable numbers, in conditions of some physical discomfort, and for no better reason than that everyone else is doing it. Unless you have the physique of a professional basketball player, you will no more be able to see the exhibits in peace and at leisure than you can read the latest best seller on the opposite side of the car in a crowded subway train. But there are people who find reassurance and confirmation in the presence of others. "If it were empty," they say to themselves, "it couldn't he good." Seeing the line, they join it. And who is to say that we ourselves have never done the same when we see a line outside a movie theater? But the true constituency of a great muse-um is one that wants to grow old with certain works of art around them. In so growing, they see them differently and see them better. They notice when a great painting has been cleaned, or a roomful of medieval art has been newly installed, or the entire gamut of the Egyptian collections has been in orderly and legible sequence. If their favorite rooms are sometimes almost empty, they do not feel rehuked and rejected by public opinion. If anything, they rejoice in the chance to look at leisure in what a late 18th-century aesthetician called "subdued and silent humility."

They notice loans, too. For quite some time now they have been looking at the little Remhrandt of "The Rape of Europa" that is on loan at the Met, just as they noticed the arrival the other day of a major new painting by Pieter de Hooch. And when they are crowded out of the "Primitivism" show at the Modern they know that npstairs in the big new drawings galleries they will find Picasso and Van Gogh in top furm. Visitors of this sort stand for continuity in the life of

They also know that scholarship is continually grinding away not only in their own local museums but the world over, and that some of its findings may affect them almost temperature in which delicate works of art are on display. Simply by standing, we wear out the floors. Simply by looking about us, out the floors. Ticketed and turn-out floor in a scholarly out favorites is laid wide open in a scholarly article. When it was more or less proven not long ago that the people in Watleau's "Embarkation for Cythera' were on the wa back from Cythera rather than on their way to it, the whole sense of the painting was changed. We may never get to read all those articles, but we like to think that someone out there is doing it for us.

To anyone who feels that the Met is neglecting that particular constituency, another new publication may be commended. This is the two-volume catalog of the Met's Flemish paintings. Begun some 15 years ago by Margaretta Salinger, and carried further by Egbert Haverkamp-Begemann and Martha Wolff, this has now been enlarged and completed by Dr. Walter A. Liedtke, associate eurator of European paintings. As is traditional in such matters, workshop paintings and copies receive the same open-funded courtesy as accredited masterpieces, on the ground that to anyone who knows how to look there is almost no such thing as a totally uninteresting picture.

But the weight and strength of this catalog lie in its examination of the great paintings hy Van Dyck, Jordaens and above all Rubens that include some of the most glorious achievements of Flemisb art. Thanks to some recent cleaning, combined with scholarly studies related to the quatercentenary of the artist's hirth and the recent arrival of three very important paintings by him, the museum's holdings of Rubens are gone over in a way that is particularly telling. Much is said that could not have been said even 10 years ago, and altogether our enjoyment of the Flemish paintings in the Met will be much enhanced by a little homework with these two volumes

FI even those who like to go through the Met at their own pace and in their own way will he made aware of the mega-exhibition of the day. The clatter and bang of the king-size cash register that stands just outside the last room in the Van Gogh exhibition is the single most offensive sound that I have ever heard in a great museum. Hideous souvenirs of the Vatican show remain to haunt us in the museum shop. The size of the crowd in "Van Gogh in Arles" defeats the very object of the show, which is to present the material in such a way that we can dart back and forth, matching and mating as we go among images that may never again be hrought ingether. Even so, it is possible to be too delicate about this, as about other mega-exhibitions. Van Gogh dreamed of hringing consolation to everyone, without exception. He wanted an audience of Beethnven-size, Dickens-size, Thistoy-size, and now he has it. (Even he might have grieved, though, in see that the crowds at the Met are almost entirely white.) Besides, who are we in say that nithing can be seen in a crowd? Everybody responds in his own way, and it may be that the sense of collective awe that Van Gogh can generate stands as high in the hierarchy of human

Modena's Romanesque Splendors But the affluent city, conscious of its heri-

by Edith Schloss

Willigelmo's relief sculptures on the Modena cathedral.

ODENA, Italy — There is another Italy, the Italy off the beaten track of tourism, a country for the curious and interested traveler, where you still may discover towns that have always been small kingdoms, and are still the fulcrum of a whole region — with their splendid old cathedrals, parish churches and civic buildings relatively intouched by the years.

Even if modified by changes of taste, their grandly functional facades, often starkly symmetrical, are garlanded with sculpture reliefs and insets of stone that not only tell us the tales of the scriptures but testify to the earnestness, and the importance in daily life,

A town like this is Modena, in the fertile Po plain. The wide valley has always been the main thoroughfare, the road to Rome for pilgrim and invader. A few kilometers out-side Modena, the monastery of Nonantola, with its tich lands, was the seat of power in feudal times, but gradually the town and its itizens took over from the monks and the lords of Canossa.

As a sign of their rising power and pros-perity, they wanted a cathedral. They asked Lanfranco, one of the foremost architects of the time, to build it on the site of an older church, and it was begun in 1099. In 1106 the relics of the patron saint of Modena, San Geminiano, were installed in it, which probably signified it had been completed. This cathedral was different from the churches of the period, with their squal vaults and columns and uncomplicated spaces, not only because of the daring and complexity of its proportions, but because of the intelligent use of found Roman elements. The white of the antique marbles makes a fine contrast with the red brick of the grand, severe structure.

But the cathedral's most wonderful feature is a cycle of reliefs by Willigelmo, a sculptor from the north, which perfectly complement the building and its inventive new conception of space. Despite the many alterations it had to submit to through the ages, Lanfranco's and Willigelmo's cathedral in Modena, where sculpture and architecture reign in perfect balance, is one of the wonders of the Romanesque style.

Because of arbitrary modifications due to changes in architectural fashions, a World War II bombardment, traffic and other pollution, the early purity of the cathedral complex suffered much corrosion and damage.

tage, has begun a set of extensive restora-

The first of them, completed this year, was the thorough cleaning of Willigelmo's splen-did reliefs in white Greek marble on the cathedral Iacade, and it is complemented by six connected exhibitions, as well as concerts and other cultural events lasting through the rest of the year.

Willigelmo's finely chiseled parade of reliefs, now looking as good as new, proceeds slowly over the uncompromising sweep of Lanfranco's facade. Willigelmo's interpretation of Genesis is straightforward and unblinking, both in the way the figures are arranged and conceived and in the way the story is told.

The bodies of Adam and Eve are those of sturdy country people, plump and naked, and not idealized nudes; and the measured rhythm of the gestures of God and angels are in simple counterpoint with the jagged fearful motions of the mortals. Apparently guileless engraved sentences further explain the meaning of each tableau, subtly expounding Willigelmo's understanding of the antique.

▼ O those of us who have been brought up with the idea of the Dark Ages — that after the rude Romanesque and the sky-striving Gothic, the Renaissance suddenly rediscovered the art and values of the antique - Lanfranco and Willigelmo give a good lesson in the organic continuity of art in Italy.

They make it plain that they not only understood the autique, but gladly used it, each in his own manner. Lanfranco, dug the foundation for his cathedral on a sile that was always a place of worship, probably a Roman temple before it became a Byzantine church. He came across finds that he literally incorporated in his own structure, using geometric Roman fragments to embellish his walls, Roman lions to hold up his portico, and so on.

Willigehno borrowed his motifs from the antique: his angels are derived from Roman putti, his Noah's ark is in the form of a Roman sarcophagus. And a century or two later, the Campionesi, artisans from the north, elaborated on this, sculpting the Corinthian capitals of the cathedral.

Everywhere there are peacocks, griffins, winged horses, vegetable faces wallowing and swallowing. It is as if these artists, pre-Christian beliefs and country still in their hood, and louth to shed the peace. their blood, and loath to shed the pagan legends, slyly held on to them, incorporating them into their work and turning them into the symbols of Christianity; the antique beasts, emblems of the underworld of evil to be vanquished by human and saintly virtue

The newly cleaned statue of San Geminiano, originally erected in the Piazza Grandin 1376 and now installed inside the cathe dral, is another discovery. It is oddly put together, from sheets of molded and has mered brass or copper, and the head of te saint is grand in its austere planarity.

But what about the metal canopy a connected panels over and behind the said? They are ornamented with little figures; gaged in the activities of the rural month of the year, planting, pruning, harvesting, hig-ing, Outside any style, their cumning simul-ity is beguiling. Perhaps coming close to he art, the vivid directness of this masterpage speaks to us across the ages.

Of the series of exhibitions, some celebrat ing completed restorations and others point ing out the necessity of their continuance the least didactic are also the most enjoyable. The Museo Lapidario del Duomo displays Roman fragments and fragments from the marble balustrade surrounding the altar of the original Byzantine church.

At Nonantola, the relief running around the portal is by a follower of Willigeland and in the crypt the columns are topped with the capitals of the Campionesi, while freshly discovered bits of frescos can be found in the monastery's eating hall nearby. In the Museo Estense in Modena there are some of the Roman surcophagi which inspired Willi-

"When the Cathedrals Were White: Willi gelmo and Lanfranco," the key show, is housed under the arcades of the City Hall, which like the cathedral flanks the Piazza Grande — the profane and sacred edifices, set around a main square in the past, now form the core of Italian city life.

The show is serious and complete. But with its wealth of materials - many casts of sculpture, some original capitals, cross scotions, and photographs appearing again and again in different sections and different con-texts, next to panels full of long explanatory texts, it is overwhelming.

Nor does it help that the whole modern display under the old Renaissance vanits and colonnades is encased by clear plastic walls and arches and coils of metal tubing. For all the painstaking research and categorizing, it would work better as a book. Accompanying pamphlets and an elaborate catalog in three volumes add to the awesome complexity. ■ fullness with their perceptions intact. To hear people talk, you would think that when the ailing Marcel Proust got himself out of bed in November 1921, and made his way to the Jeu de Panme in Paris to see Vermeer's feeling as does the solitary discrimination of the scholar.

Besides, some museums have always been full, and a lot of visitors have survived that fullness with their perceptions intact. To hear people talk, you would think that when the ailing Marcel Proust got himself out of the country of the same, and — crowd or no crowd — he saw things in the Vermeer that he had never noticed before. There are the limited by the same and a preferential treatment. # Opening Portugal's Solares

by Marvine Howe

ONTE DE LIMA, Portugal - The ivory and spices of India, the gold and precions stones of Brazil brought back by the Portuguese navigators several bundred years ago are gone. But the manor houses called solares still stand as a proud reminder of the pros-perous epoch of the discoveries.

Although solares can be found all over Portugal, the largest concentration is in the northeastern corner called the Costa Verde or Green Coast, between the ancient ports of Viana do Castelo and Ponte de Lima, Here was the original seat of Portugal's power, the site of the shipbuilding industry, where the sturdy caravels that took Prince Henry and others out to discover new worlds were built.

The Portuguese aristocracy, like the British and the French, has come to the conclosion that the best way to preserve its ances-tral homes is to open them to the public. Many of the solares have been recently re-stored and opened to visitors, not as museums but as guest houses.

The owners or members of their family generally live in the solares and more often than not welcome visitors to share not only their homes but also their traditional way of life. This can mean anything from elegant meals in the family dining room to cozy evenings of conversation beside the monumental kitchen stove or taking part in the vindima (grape harvest) or whatever seasonal activities are going on.

The solares program got under way two years ago; already there are about 600 rooms in 250 homes, extending from the Costa Verde to the plains of the Alentejo. (The Algarve is not included in the program be-cause there are already plenty of hotels, villas and apartments for tourists in that

For all their style and comfort, the solares are quite a bargain, especially for American travelers with dollars to spend. A double room and private bath, including breakfast, runs less than the equivalent of $20 a night and a single with breakfast, less than $13. Some of the solares offer apartments in renovated stables, wine cellars or servants quar-ters that include bedroom, bath, living room for two people or $29 for four.

Visitors interested in a general tour of the solares, or who want to make reservations, should contact the Department of Tourism in Private Homes (Portuguese Ministry of Tourism, Rua Alexandre Herculano 51, 3-D; tel: 68.17.13).

Visitors who would rather concentrate on the Costa Verde should put themselves into the hands of either the tourism office in Ponte de Lima (Ponte de Lima 4490; tel: 942,335) or the regional tourism office in Viana do Castelo (Comissão Regional de Turismo do Alto Minho, Palacio dos Tavoras, Rua Candido dos Reis; tel: 22.620). Members of the staffs of these offices can provide basic information about the solares, aggest an itinerary and make reservations (It is advisable to request reservations well in dvance since most solares have only two or three guest rooms available.) To get to the Costa Verde most visitors fly to Oporto and then rent a car; distances in northern Portugal are short and driving in the countryside delightful. Local buses can also be used in the region and some hosts may even send a car for their guests.

It is most pleasant to be able to spend two or three nights in one solar, and then go on to another; if time is limited, however, one can arrange to sleep in one solar and visit another for lunch or tea.

HERE are some notable urban solares, including what has become the L handsome tourism office in Viana do Castelo; it used to belong to the Tavora family and is well worth a visit. Most solares, however, are country estate houses built of thick, whitewashed granite, with square towers, outside stone stairways and orange tile roofs and a long facade often expanded over the centuries as the family grew. They are similar in their spaciousness, simplicity of line and relaxed style of life, but beyond that each one offers a different experience.

If your point of departure is Viana do Castelo, a night or more might be spent at the Paço d'Anha, a wine-producing estate three miles south of Viana. (Paço is the word used when a king has lived in a place that is not a royal palace.) The owner of Paço d'Anha, Antonio Julio de Alpoim, recounts how the Portuguese pretender Dom Antonio Prior de Crato hid on the farm at the end of the 16th century, when Portugal was under Spanish occupation.

Alpoim, who is an engineer, delights in showing visitors his modern winery with its electric press that replaced the old-fashioned foot-stamping method. Each year he produces 25,000 liters of vinho verde, the sparkling wine of the region, under the label of Paço d'Anha; since the 1974 revolution much of it has been exported to Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia,

Apartments have been set aside for tourists in the oewly renovated annexes that used to house the cattle, tools and lagar (the wine cellar that is on the ground floor of buildings in that part of the country). Guests are welcome to visit the main house, which is like a museum, and take part in the activities of the 125-acre (50-hectare) walled farm;

nd kitchenette at the equivalent of $22.50 they may bunt rabbits, play tennis, go on picnics or simply lie about in a hammock under the olive trees.

Just on the outskirts of Viana stands the stately Casa do Ameal, with its formal gardens, fountain and grape and corn farm. The 80-year-old owner, Maria Isabel da Costa Pereira Vilhena Coutinho de Faria Araujo, has kept many Portuguese traditions including ber endless name, which notes paternal and maternal lines. She, or one of her six children who live in the house, readily tell visitors about its history. The family has owned the Casa do Ameal since it was purchased on Feb. 20, 1669, hy Antonio de Lima e Abreu but there are historical references to the house dating from 1579.

The main house, which is furnished largely with Portuguese antiques, has three bed-rooms and four studio apartments available to paying guests. There's also a private craft shop on the property where some of the women of the region display and sell such work as embroidered cotton cloths, lace hand towels, and linen-covered pillows.

The Casa de Cortegaca is a few miles from Viana on the bank of the Lima River. It is a typical noble farm, with servants' quarters, stable, wine cellar, a chapel and a mill where flour is ground for the landlord and the workers. Fifteen families work on the 25acre property that produces corn and grapes. In the old days the family used to make its own wine; this year they are sending the grapes to the local cooperative,

The great stone tower is said to date from "at least" the 15th century, with wings built in the 17th and 19th centuries. Over the last three years there have been new works on the solar; several hathrooms have been added and last Easter three bedrooms with private bathrooms were opened to visitors.

Cortegaca belongs to Pedro Magalhaes Lancoz de Abreu Coutinho, monarchist and member of the Order of Malta, sociologist, paleographer and professor. He and his wife Maria Filomena Camara Manoel Reynolds were, like so many of the oorthern Portugnese nobility, distant relatives when they married. She likes to point out that one of their ancestors is Caterina, the daughter of João Alves Fagundes, the navigator who the Portuguese say discovered Newfoundland. Ever since, Portuguese fishermen have gone there for codfish, their national food.

The most unusual solar is really an old stone mill, Azenha de Estoraos, next to a Roman bridge over a tributary of the Lima River. The joy of the mill, which has been converted into a single apartment with one bedroom and bath, a living room and kitchenette, is that the only sound one hears is that of the splash of water. The owner, an, architect, lives only a few yards away in the village of Estoraos.

NE reason so many people have opened their solares in the Ponte de Lima area is that the mayor, João Gomes de Abreu e Lima, receives tourists in his own home. The mayor's solar, called Casa do Outeiro, was built in 1580, with additions made in the 18th century, and has always belonged to the Abreu Lima family.

never gets really cold," the mayor said, urg-ing visitors to sample the passion fruit. He expressed faith in the future of tourism in the region, pointing out the natural stress of folklore and important cultural sites of Ponte de Lima, Barcelos, Viana, Braga and Catherine the Roman on, pointing out the natural beauty, rich imarais, not to mention the Roman Catholic shrine of Santiago de Compostela across the Spanish border.

Guests at Outeiro are treated as part of the family, welcome to share the dining room, library and television. At the end of the day there are usually family gatherings either in the garden or by the fireplace, and advice is given on what to do and see in the region. Dr. Luis Graça, a businessman, and his wife, Maria Madalena, live in Oporto but own a 17th-century solar called Casa de Abades that bes in a valley a few miles from Ponte de Lima. For tourists they have fixed up one bedroom in the main house and an apartment in the annex that was used as a eaving room and distillery.

Often, too, Dr. and Mrs. Graça are asked by the Tourism Ministry to put on tea or lunch for groups staying in other solares. Mrs. Graça recalled the time she was asked to serve tea for the wives of delegates attending a congress in the region. At the last minute she was informed that the delegates wanted to come to lunch as well and so there would be 65 guests instead of 20.

"It all turned out fine because Luis went to the nearby adega and got combread, sausage and wine for the delegates, and there was port wine, tea, almond and cream cakes and toast for the ladies," she said, Another hillside solar with a spectacular view of the Lima River Valley is the 17thcentury Paço de Calheiros, with two towers, that has been undergoing restoration for five years. The Calheiros family, who are camping out in one wing of the solar, say they will be ready to open the house and chapel oext year; there will be 10 rooms as well as a swimming pool, tennis courts and horseback riding for the solar's guests.

Quail Time in Alexandria Is a Break for the Pigeons

by Judith Miller

LEXANDRIA, Egypt - The two city each summer have gone back to the capital. The graceful Corniche, the seafront road lined by Mediterranean-style hotels and restaurants, is navigable once more. The beach umbrellas that recently obscured almost every other grain of sand have vanished.

Best of all, quail season in Alexandria is in full swing. From the end of September until the first weeks of November, thousands of quail fly over Alexandria from central Europe en route to their winter habitat in the Sudan. The journey across the Mediterranean is long and tiring, so the birds fly in low over the water and land on Alexandria's shores io droves. Handmade cotton nets laid by Bedouin trappers await them. The trapping infuriates hunters, for whom quail are favored prey. Thousands of quail are caught in nets or shot each day and shipped to homes and restaurants throughout Egypt.

The gastronomical center of the quail scasoo is Uncle Elias's, an outdoor restaurant in the Piazza Syrian, one of the oldest quarters in the Attarine, Alexandria's spice and antiques market. By day, the piazza specializes io the sale of secondhand clothes. At night, for as many years as anyone can remember or is willing to admit, tables and chairs are unloaded from the roofs of the shops and dilapidated buildings that surround the cozy square and Uocle Elias's appears.

A simple cotton tablecloth and a plastic flower adorn each of the 15 tables. The restaurant's only decorations are bird cages containing live quail, with a small red light bulb atop each cage. Next to the entrance of the square, an old man sells strands of freshly picked sweet-scented jasmine for women to wear as necklaces for the evening.

Uncle Elias's opens for business at 9 P.M. But none of the chic Alexandrians, or those who drive three hours from Cairo to eat there, would be seen in the restaurant before 10 P.M. By 10:30 the piazza is hopping. Defense Minister Abdel Halim Abu Ghazala came last season. Mohammed Abdullah, chairman of the Parliament's Foreign Affairs Committee, is a regular. The restaurant is also a favored haunt of Egyptian film

HIS year, Uncle Elias's has drawn a large crowd from the Alexandria dip-lomatic community. Frances D. Cook, the energetic American consul general, dines there frequently. Recently, Italy's dashing consul general, Giancarlo Izzo, and his Australian-born wife, Virginia, were seen there dining with a leading Alexandrian

"There is oo one who doesn't know the place," said Mona Anis, a member of one of the city's prominent families. For visitors, however, discovering Uncle Elias's can be a problem. The restaurant appears in oo restaurant guide, and to its clientele it is known by various names: Uncle Elias's, which is A quail cage.

what its owner calls it, King of Quail, or just the Quail Restaurant.

Dinner at Uncle Elias's is not a restful experience. Young boys carrying sticks run among tables chasing away the battalions of cats who descend upon the square, lured by the irresistible aroma of fresh grilled baby

AMRA Shahata Khalil, who bought the restaurant about five years ago from Uncle Elias, who was Lebanese, began his career in the restaurant business as

"We only serve quail in pairs," Samra said. "That way, the birds do not get cold." Of course, patrons frequently reorder several times in the evening, bringing the oumber of quail served each might to about 600.

A pair of quail cost two Egyptian pounds, or about $2.40. That is expensive, by Egyptian standards. But the baby quail are so tender that regulars eat even the bones and are so desirable that the line of Alexandrians awaiting seats snakes in and around the

HE secret to making good quail, Samra said, is in the cooking and the seasoning. The quail, which are rich and require no oil, are grilled quickly over a very bot flame. Only a hand fan of turkey feathers waved vigorously by the grill master keeps the tender birds from burning. Samra was reluctant to reveal the spices used to season his birds. But after some prodding, he permitted a quick tour of the preparation area of the square, where an assistant griller was spooning out seasonings from an old coffee can. The spices, he said, included cumin, cinnamon, oregano, allspice, outmeg, salt and pepper.

The quail are considered such a delicacy that they are served alone. They are preceded because the such as the such a ed, however, by an array of Egyptian salads: thinly sliced cucumbers with lemon wedges; tahina, the sesame-based dip for bread; baba chanoush, a grilled eggplant and garlic mixture known throughout the Middle East, and tomatoes. The choice of beverages is limited because the restaurant operates in a public square in a country whose Moslem citizens are not supposed to drink alcohol. Only soft drinks or Stella, Egyptian beer, are available. Some customers bring their own wine.

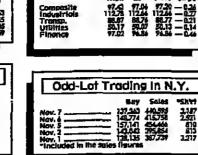

When the quail season ends, Uncle Elias's will revert to selling grilled pigeon, a special-ty of Egypt's delta, much to Samra's regret. Pigeons are popular, be said, "but there is nothing quite like quail."

'Chronohygienists' Tackle ► Pitfalls of Night Shift Work HE DOW

By JOHN HOLUSHA New York Times Sernce

ETROIT — Expensive machinery is much more efficiently employed when it is operated for more than eight hours a day, which is why many factories run double shifts or more. Some facilities, such as ouclear power plants, oil refineries and glass plants, are kept running around the clock for months.

Unfortunately for the human workers involved, the demands of these machines often conflict with the "internal clocks" we have inherited from our primitive ancestors, who generally were active during the day and rested at night. Although these internal pacemakers can be reset - at least in some individuals — there are a variety of physical and psy-chological problems caused by unusual and rotating work shifts. These include chronic fatigue, mood changes and irritability, poor job performance and inattention to safety, digestive disturbances and chemical dependencies. Because shift work is increasing, more attention is being paid to a subject known as "chrooohygiene," the study of the effects of work schedules on health, safety and performance in occupations where nonstandard shifts are required. As many as 25 percent of U.S. workers have shifts other than the standard one of 8 A.M. to 5 P.M., industrial health specialists estimate, and 75 percent of workers will have unusual schedules at some point in their lives.

Rapid shift rotations are better than longer spells on day or night shifts.

CCORDING to Dennis J. Panstenbach, an official of Syntex Corp. and a member of a committee established by the American Industrial Hygiene Association to study the health effects of shift work: "The best shifts are the ones that conflict with a person's social life as little as possible." For example, he said, in industries where 12-hour shifts are standard, it would be preferable to start them at 6 A.M. and 6 P.M. rather than midnight and ocon. heretraet 11.

The reason is that workers starting at 6 A.M. or 6 P.M. would have some time to be with their children, either before or after school, and perhaps have a meal with the entire family. A person starting at noon, however, would probably not be awake until after school begins and one starting at midnight would probably be asleep when the children come home. "A 3-to-3 shift makes even less sense for the same reasons," Mr. Paustenbach added,

Twelve-hour shifts are increasing in popularity, though, because they are usually rotated, meaning that workers draw both day and night assignments. This kind of arrangement means that younger workers do not have to wait for years until they accumulate enough seniority to get on day shifts. And since these shifts are commonly three days on and three or four days off, they provide more spare time for workers because commuting time is

Some work shifts are determined by the need to keep equipment operating, others by the need for shorter periods of intense concentration. The four hours on, four hours off, Navy watch, for example, was developed during the 17th century for the continuous operation of a ship at sea. Not only does it limit the time a sailor has to concentrate on navigating or watching for danger, but it does not interfere with sleeping, because it does not interfere with the basic night-day pattern. "This way, the biological clock does not have to adjust," said Dr. Alain Reinberg of France's Rothschild Foundation. "It is a good system."

Added Dr. Reinberg, who has done extensive studies of shift work at oil refineries in Europe, rapid shift rotations are better

Nigeria Rejects Oil Quota

OPEC Reduction Is Called Unfair

By Clifford D. May

LAGOS - Nigeria will maintain its nver-quota pace of oil produc-tion for the foreseeable future re-gardless of cuts by other OPEC members, according to Nigeria's oil minister. Tam David-West.

Members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed in Geneva last week to lower the group's overall production ceiling from 17.5 million barrels a day to 16 million, in a bid to reduce the world oil glut and bolster sag-

Many Western oil analysts had expected Nigeria to make at least a token ontput cut in line with the OPEC decision. But Mr. David-West insisted Wednesday that "Nigeria is not cutting production." He said Nigeria would continue to produce more oil than is allowed under its official OPEC quota.

The Nigerian daily quota is 1.3 million barrels. Last July, however, OPEC granted Nigeria a temporary increase to 1.4 million for August and to 1.45 million for September.

"The increment was made in recognition of our present economic plight," Mr. David-West said. "It would be cosmetic if it were only for two months. It would just scratch the surface."

Marietta Sheds Old-Line Businesses

By Mark Ports

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — It has been a decade since Martin Mar-York to take up residence in the Washington suburb of Bethesda, Maryland. And in that time, the area's largest company has as-sumed more and more of the characteristics of many of its

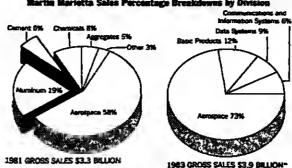

Once an industrial conglomerate whose heavy aerospace operations were balanced by major involvement in such old-line businesses as cement, aluminum, sand and gravel, Marietta has been transformed into a highflying, high-technology outfit invloved in data processing, contract management and some of the other esoteric arts practiced by many of the companies that ring Washington.

Martin Marietta still builds rockets, missiles and other air-craft parts and equipment, but under the chairman, Thomas G. Pownall, the company has shed most of its other businesses in favor of a strategy oriented to-ward faster growing fields. In addition to data processing and contract management, Marietta is dabbling in high-tech communications systems and biotechnology, and has plans to go into the satellite business. With the change in direction, the company is emphasizing re-search and development work. "I think it is positioned to become a major growth company through the 1980s," says Anthony Pearce-Batten, an analyst at Legg Mason Wood Walker Inc. in Baltimore. In many cases, Marietta has created large chunks of business from its existing interests. Its own computer needs begat the data-processing company oow doing $275 million worth of business a year. And its aerospace business sired the $684million federal air traffic control systems development contract that is one of the gems of its recently formed communications and information systems unit, itself a $200 million-a-year

Marietta's ability to manage complex defense projects has given it an edge in the lucrative coolract management game. Earlier this year, it won a con-tract worth as much as $20 million a year to run the Department of Energy's nuclear energy research laboratory complex at Oak Ridge, Tennessee.

These new busioesses are owing fast. Revenue from the data-processing unit will increase by about 25 percent this year, and the brokerage house Conning & Co. estimates that potential new orders for Marietta's information and communciations systems business alone could be more than $2 billion over the next few years.

While the reshuffling of assets has left acrospace to account for about 75 percent of the compa-ny's revenue, 1983 figures indicate growth in Marietta's other businesses will equal the size of the aerospace division within a few years. The company's 1983 revenues were $3.9 billion and revenue for the first nine months of 1984 was $2.8 billion.

The announcement last month that the company had signed an agreement in principle to sell most of its aluminum business to Comalco Ltd. of Australia for $400 million virtually marked the end of Marietta's old-line business sectors. About all that remains is a medium-sized basic materials business that makes ingredients used in highway contruction and steel manufacturing and which Mr. Pownall says is too profitable to touch.

Directors Ousted Under Dunlop's Reconstruction

By Bob Hagerty nernational Herald Tribu

LONDON — Dunlop Haldings PLC's bank creditors have forced out most of the company's direc-tors and agreed in principle on a financial reconstruction.

The tottering tire and rubber company anounced Thursday that its board had appointed as executive chairman Sir Michael Edwardes, a former chairman of the state-owned automaker BL PLC and of ICL PLC, Britain's biggest computer maker. Sir Mi-chael's appointment was expected, but the immediate departure of eight other directors came as a sur-

Sir Maurice Hodgsoo, wbo agreed to step down as Dunlop's chairman after just 10 months in that position, said the company ex-pects to reach a final accord on the reconstruction soon.

Under the reconstruction, approximately 45 banks from Britain, France, West Germany, Switzerland and the United States are expected to transform loans to the company into preference shares convertible into ordinary shares. Dunlop also is expected to raise cash by selling oew shares to instututional investors.

A banker involved in the talks said existing Dunlop shareholders are likely to end up owning well below 20 percent of the company. Sir Michael brings with him two colleagues. Robin Biggam, formerly finance director of ICL was named to the same post at Dunlop. Roger Holmes, formerly joint secretary and corporate affairs director at the computer company, be-eomes a Dunlop director responsible for planning and cominications. Dunlop said that its board, at Sir Michael's request, dismissed Alan Lord, chief executive, as well as Kenneth Gardener, finance director, and two other executive directors, A.T. Harvey and Roy Marsh. The board also accepted the resig-nations of four ourside directors, Sir John Baring, Sir Arthur Knight, William Menzies-Wilson and Sir John Read. Collin Hope and Ken Johnson are to step down as direc-tors but remain executives. Only C.A. Eng and Gbafar Baba, who represent of a group of Malaysian investors, remain from the old

Sir Michael, 54, became avail-able last August when ICL agreed to be acquired by Standard Tele-phones & Cables PLC. Leading bankers vigorously pushed for his appointment, overriding the pref-erence of Sir Maurice for another candidate, who has not been officially named.

Sir Michael is credited with having helped to revive BL through ferocious cost-cutting. But some analysts criticize his performance at Chloride Group PLC, a British battery maker, which stumbled into losses after he relinquished day-to-day control in 1977. Dunlop, which has had losses of £302 million ($380 million) during the past four years, expects to complete soon the sale of its British and West German tire manufacturing interests to Sumitomo Rubber Industries Ltd. The company retains tire-making interests in the United States, South Africa and Malaysia and also makes sporting goods, aviation brakes, automotive hose, mattresses, footwear and wheels. More asset sales are expected,

In Bid to Win Contracts, U.S. Firms Offer to Make Big Saudi Investments

JEDDAH - Several U.S. defense companies have offered to make large investments in Saudi Arabia in an effort to secure multibillion-dollar military contracts in the kingdom, according to sources here. Contracts worth from $3 billion to $4 billion for Saudi Arabia's military program are at stake, and the Saudi government for the first time is demanding that winning companies invest in high-technology industries bere.

The investments must be worth up to 35 percent of the value of technical goods and services provided in the contracts and, according to one source, could run as high as $500 million.

Three competing groups, led by Boeing Co., Hughes Aircraft Co. and Litton Industries Inc., are bidding for the major contract, and a separate radar order is likely to go to General Electric Co. of the United States.

The investment proposals submitted Wednesday were being kept secret as the companies sought to prevent rivals from gaining a competitive advantage in the month before their proposals are likely to be formally considered.

Boeing heads a group that includes ITT Corp., Westinghouse Electric Corp., Computer Sciences Corp. and Frank E. Basil Inc. Litton's consortium includes Western Electric Co. and Bechtel Corp. and the third group is made up of Hughes Aircraft and Rockwell International Corp.

Varian Picks President of Overseas Unit

By Brenda Hagerry International Herula Tribune

LONDON — Varian Associates inc., a California-based maker of nicrowave, semiconductor and communication equipment, bas made top-level appointments as part of its plans to strengthen its international operation.

The company has named David F. Minnery president of its international group, filling a post that has been beld on an acting basis by Thomas D. Sege, Varian's chairman and chief executive officer.

Mr. Minnery, who was vice pres-iden 1 of Varian's international operations, assumes responsibility for European sales and service opera-tions in his new post. Varian has operations in 10 European countries. Mr. Minnery will also oversee the activities of subsidiaries in Canada, China, Australia, Brazil and Mexico, in addition to managing the company's office of interna-tional development and its export-farm equipment.

MR NOON

By D. H. Lawrence. Edited by Lindeth Vasey. 370 pp. $24.95. Cambridge University Press, 32 East 57th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by John Gross

MR NOON," which is being offered as a new novel by D. H. Lawrence, is real-ly two different stories held together by the same hero—and not even quite that, since the hero is really two different men held together by the same name.

The first part, which makes up about a third of the book, has in fact been published before, though without causing any great stir. Lawrence failed to find a publisher for it when he completed it in 1921, but it was eventually brought out in 1934, four years after his death. The second part, however, is a genuine discov-

There had been rumors about it, but the manuscript disappeared from view; it passed through a number of hands, and only showed up in public in 1972, when it was offered for sale at Sotheby's and bought by the University of Texas, which has made it available for the Cambridge collected edition.

The "Mr Noon" whom we meet in Part One is a schoolteacher in a small town in Lawis a schoolteacher in a small town in Law-rence's native Midlands (though he is not much like Lawrence himself—he is largely based on one of his early friends). He is a clever man, at a loose end, and a dedicated practitioner of the great local sport of "spooning"—kissing and canoodling the kind of thing people used to do by the light of the eithers man for in this case. by the light of the silvery moon (or, in this case, in darkened alleys after chanel on Sunday nights). Eventually he gets caught in a compromising situation with a girl who specializes in "going too far." He is very nearly inveigled into marriage, but then she comes to the conclusion that the alternative candidate, a humdrum bank clerk, is a better bet as a husband.

The extraordinary thing about this otherwise rather commonplace tale is the frisky manner Lawrence adopts. He keeps up a bantering commentary, skips around like a court jester, peppers the "gentle reader" with genial sar-casm. On the subject of spooning, which obsesses him, he is quite unnervingly jaunty.

How odd to think of all this coming from the author who only three or four years before had unleashed the apocalyptic furies of "Women in Love." The story has its serious side — you get a strong sense of the dingmess of provincial life; there are some genuinely amusing moments — the scene where the errant Noon is hauled before the school governors, for instance, which is described in a style that mimics the Victorian children's classic "The Water Babies." But on the whole the tone is hard to take; it is often jarring, even embarrassing.

In the end Lawrence himself decides be has had enough, and Noon is suddenly spirited off to Germany, which is where we find him at the beginning of Part Two. From this point on he is unmistakably identified with his creator, and the rest of the book is a lightly fictionalized version of the first few months Lawrence and Friedn spent together after she left her husband and they cloped to the Continent in 1912. It breaks off just after they have traveled across Austria and reached the Italian lakes.

The biographical interest of the book is self-evident. The main outlines of the story may be a self-evident.

fairly familiar, and Lawrence may have used some of the same material elsewhere, in poems and sketches, but it is still fascinating to have a consecutive, finely detailed account of this central episode in his life. And whether he is describing an alpine landscape or a garrison town, intellectuals in Munich or peasants in the Tyrol, his experiences are summoned up with a sharpness that suggests something like

How far "Mr Noon" can be said to work as a novel is another question. In one sense it is more like a diary; there seems no particular reason why it should not just go on and on until the ink in Lawrence's pen runs dry. But it does at any rate have a unifying theme in the story of his relationship with Frieda, and when it comes to the conflicts between the two of them he is novelist enough to present her side of the case as well as his own.
Something is not quite right, however. Much of the writing is forced, and when he strains after lyrical effect Lawrence can easily slip into self-parody. Once or twice, in the lovemaking scanes, he even becomes positively (and oot very convincingly) boastful, and he also continues to harangue the "gentle reader" — less frequently than in Part One, but more raspingly, it looks as though he himself sensed that the book was turning out a failure - why else should he have abandoned it?

Yet Lawrence's failures are a lot more interesting than most other people's successes, and there are some wonderful things in "Mr Noon." His reactions to German militarism, for instance, on the eve of World War I, have an acuteness that you rarely find in orthodox history books. He makes you live through most of the scenes he describes - if he recounts a climb through the mountains, you clamber over the rocks with him. Above all, there is what he calls his "mEnglishing" as he sets off with Frieda -- a dazzling sense of liberation, of new landscapes and new possibilities.

"Mr Noon" is the latest volume in the Cambridge Edition of Lawrence, which aims to establish definitive texts. The editor's notes are helpful but also erratic: it is assumed that the reader needs to be told who Jack and Jill are, but all kinds of obscure references are left unexplained. And the text is numbered in the margin, every five lines, which is a constant unsightly distraction. Lawrence would have loathed such pedantic fussiness — or perhaps he would just have laughed.

Bedtime Story

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — It is an awful hour of the night. I am suited up as an antique Spanish seducer, though not clear why until I realize that the vast piece of fabric at which I am looking is a theater

Ah yes, I am backstage. I can hear the audience buzzing out front, waiting for the curtain to rise. An orchestra is tuning up. Oboe noises. Fiddle strings.

But of course! Of course! This is the Metropolitan Opera, and the curtain is about to rise, and I am about to sing the title role in Mo-zart's "Don Giovanni." That ex-plains the Spanish knickers, the goatee. And now the curtain is opening. I can see the audience, and a blood-curdling thought suddenly occurs to me:

What is this? Some miracle has removed me from the stage, set me down in this monstrous black maze of rooms in which someone in a er mind," I muttered at 3 that murderous mood — Mozart per-haps — is pursuing me silently. The terror is rent by a sudden pungent aftertaste of pizza with pepperoni, eaten not wisely but too fast just before bedtime.

Ah, what a merciful waking. Just another nightmare. I rise wide awake, thinking of those television commercials filled with people unable to sleep until they have gob-bled some of the sponsor's pills.

I go to the next room. There are shelves filled with books. There is a comfortable chair, an exact duplicate of the chair in the downstairs parlor in which I sit to watch televi-

I am now about to put myself quickly back to sleep. I go to the place on the bookshelves where the Autohiography of Benjamin Franklin" stands. Good old Ben. He never fails me.

I have never shown this room with the books to anyone, though somehow a few people know it exists, for friends now and then very discreetly, mind you - have said, "You know, it's being said

I betray nothing on these occa-sions. "Books?" I say. "You mean those things like public television that don't interrupt themselves for

It wouldn't do to let the impression get abroad that one was ---- eccentric. And, of course, nobody would believe the truth, that I keep the books only because they put me back to sleep so swiftly after the nightmares.

Opening Franklin's autobiography, I sit in the chair so similar to the chair downstairs I use for watching television and wait for my eyelids to grow heavy.

If I go back to bed and lie on the pillow with the book, it will not work. I need to sit in the viewing position to lose consciousness. It is habit, no doubt, since I have been dozing off downstairs during prime time for several months now, ever I cannot even carry the tune of since they started models." moreover, I don't with entertainment aimed exclusively at 13-year-olds.

> My copy of Ben's autobiography is new. The old copy disappeared mysteriously some time ago. "Nevmorning. I had plenty of other ponons stored up for just such a crisis.

And I took down "The Education of Henry Adams." Disaster: I was still wide awake and reading in fascination at 6 A.M. Afterward, I felt ashamed. A tale without a single car chase or a single 13-year-old outwitting alien monsters from deepest space - and I had stayed with it as loyally as a miniseries nut lapping up the shampoo commercials.

At nightmare time two nights later, I took down Prescott's "History of the Conquest of Mexico." Talk about nightmares! I was still awake and reading at breakfast time. Worse: I started phoning people, telling them that Prescott's Cortez was more exciting than 39 weeks of motorcycle accidents. Friends, good friends, came with pills before I could do anything really embarrassing, and made me spend two weeks seeing all the terrific new shows for 13-year-olds.

With my new copy of Ben's book, I am safe again. Just this morning it had me back to sleep 90 seconds after a nightmare about the whole world being taken over hy 13-year-olds.

Verdict on Richard III: 'Not Guilty'

By Mark S. Smith

Associated Press
TONDON — Five hundred years after the crime, a British jury has found King Richard III not guilty of the murder of the two teen-age nephews he alleged-ly seized and put in the Tower of London because they stood between him and the throne.

The jury, I2 Britons recently assembled by London Weekend Television, delivered its unanimous verdict after four hours of The judge and lawyers in "The Trial of Richard III," were eminent jurists. The witnesses were historians and a forensics expert.

The mystery of what happened to the princes, the 12-year-old (and not-yet-crowned) King Edward V and his 10-year-old brother, Richard, Duke of York, was a sensational subject in Richard III's own time and has been a source of historical controversy. History has not been kind to Richard III. He seized the throne in 1483 at age 30 and ruled for just a little more than two years before being killed in the Battle of Bosworth by the forces of Henry VII, the first of England's Tu-dor kings. That clash formally ended decades of skirmishing known as the Wars of the Roses. Shakespeare, the loyal subject of a later Tudor monarch, Elizabeth L wrote a drama depicting the king as a grasping, ill-tem-pered, often cowardly hunch-back And Sir Thomas More, the cleric and historian, writing un-der Henry VII, stated flatly that Richard ordered the murder of the little princes.

But recent historians have accused More of being a Tudor pro-

The matter has been a subject of flerce contention and dispute for more than 500 years," said a former appeals court judge, Lord Elwyn-Jones, in opening the trial.

The facts of the case are these: On April 9, 1483, King Edward IV died. His son, Edward V, was not of age, so the dead king's brotber Richard, Duke of Gloucester, was summoned to London to become regent. On April 29, Richard inter-taken into Richard's "care" pending a June 24 coronation and sent, weeping, to the Tower, the medieval fortress on the River Thames that was then a royal residence.

The former queen took refuge at Westminster Abbey along with her younger son. But on June 16, she sent him, too, to the Tower, where his presence was supposed-ly required for the coronation. It never took place.

On June 25, the Duke of pagamdist, and the king's sup-porters—led by The Richard III cepted the boy en route to Lon-Gloucester had her marriage to ard."

Edward IV declared invalid because of an alleged previous con-tract by the king to marry. The princes were therefore illegitimate, and the duke was declared king. He was crowned Richard III July 6.

The princes were seen once playing together in a nearby field - but were never seen again.

About 200 years later, work-men unearthed a chest in the Tower and inside were two skeletons. Assumed to be those of the princes, they were reburied in Westminster Abbey. A forension examination conducted in 1933 showed they were the right ages and seemed to be close relatives but did not settle the cause of

More, however, said unequivo-cally in his "History of Richard III" that they were smothered on the king's orders.

But under cross-examination during the trial, Anthony Pollard, a medieval history expert, ac-knowledged he once called the More account "full of provably false facts and too discredited to build on. Other historians noted that no obvsical evidence existed to show Richard ordered the murder; it was simply assumed by his contemporaries, given his strong mo-

In the end, the jury pronomeed a not-guilty verdict.

It's doubtful, though, that the trial has put the question of Richard's guilt to rest.

The modern-day Duke of Gloucester - Queen Elizabeth II's cousin but no relation to the medieval king — says he's "on the side of Richard. I cannot tell you he was a saint, but nobody could be as evil as Shakespeare's Rich-
